POWDER Destroys the Odors of Perspiration

Of all the ills from which humanity suffers none is more annoying, if not actually disgusting, than the Odors of Perspiration. It is an affliction that presents itself in the drawing-room, the parlor, the theater, in railway travel—in fact, in every kind of gathering where people meet for pleasure or business purposes. The more hustle and bustle there is, the more perspiration; the greater the activity, whether in golf or tennis playing, dancing or in bleycle riding, the more annoying are the odors that arise from the body. Clothing saturated with perspiration gives forth a most disgusting odor.

There is no reason why people should suf-fer from the odors of perspiration, to the disgust of themselves and their friends, when that simple, pure, white, odorless, antiseptic deodorizer, SPIRO POWDER, will destroy the odors, giving a freedom and cleantiness most enjoyable. SPIRO POWDER is a guaranteed tollet preparation that is sold on its merits.

And can be applied to the person direct or on the clothing. There is no preparation in the world that will do what SPIRO POWDEER will do. It is a friend to men, women and children, not only because it destroys the Odors of Perspiration, but because it also cures Chaing and Prickly Heat, Offensive and Sore Feet. For tender skin it has no equal. Prick, 25 cents; all drug stores. Mail orders promptly filled. Write for free

Special Correspondence of The Sunday Republic.
Vincennes, Ind., Sept. 21—Mr. George M. Jordan, son of ex-County Auditor S. A. Jordan, and Miss Effe E. Smith were married Wednesday

Washington, Sept. 29.-The late President, while in Congress, delivered many impressive eulogies on those among his associates n public work who had "gone before," and noticeable among these now peculiarly interesting efforts are his tributes to Presilent Garfield, General John A. Logan and Representives Kelley, Updegraff and Haskell. Especial care has been taken in the xtracts given below to quote such passages as are now applicable to the man who ut-

On January 19, 1886, the statue of Garfield was presented by the State of Ohio to the National Statuary Hall at the Capitol, and Mr. McKinley spoke, in part, as follows:

"Although elected, General Garfield never took his seat in the Senate of the United time. He had qualities which attached his great party to him and the equipment which filed the highest measure of public and party requirement. From the stirring and party requirement. From the stirring scenes of Chicago to the succeeding election, he bore himself like a statesman and patriot, fit for the lighest trust. He advanced in public confidence, and wherever he met with or addressed the people, he enlarged the circle of his admiring followers and friends. His brief term in the presidency, so tragicaly ended, gave promise of large usefulness to the country in the re-alization of the true American policy at home and abroad. His death filled the nation with profound and universal sorrow, tion with profound and universal sorrow, and all lands and all peoples sympathized in our overshadowing bereavement."

The concluding paragraph was as follows:

Kindly Words for Garfield.

"Mr. Speaker, another place of great honor we thi to-day. Nobly and worthily is it filled. Garfield has joined Winthrop and Adams and the other illustrious ones, as one of the 'the elect of the States, peoping yonder venerable beautiful land. He receives his high credentials from the hands of the State which has witned from him none of her honors, and history will gratify the choice. We add another to the immortial membership. Another enters the 'sacred circle. In slient eloquence from the 'American Pantheon' acother speaks whose lifework, with its treasures of wisdom, its wealth of achievement, its great work wrought and its priceless memories, will remain to us and cur descendants a legacy forever and forever."

Extract from some remarks, February 6, 1830, on the life of Jonathan T. Updegruff of Ohio:

"There is nothing certain in man's life but this—that he must lose it. * * * During his illness the nobleness of his character appeared at its best. Uncomplainingly he suffered, and so sensitive for the feelings of his friends that he denied most of them presence in his sick chamber, lest his suffering might give them pain. He was patient and brave in his great affliction, submitting with Christian faith to the call of death. He closed his life with messages of love and affection to present and absent friends, confident of friendly greetings beyond from those who had gone before. The nursing of a devoted wife could not save him. God's finger touched nim and he slept. The gates were opened and he entered in."

eulogy which I will speak can do justice to the noble life just closed. His life-work is his highest eulogy. What he wrought for his fellow-man and the impress he made upon the legislation of the country, will be his best and most enduring memorial. *

* As the advocate of the doctrine of protection he was, for twenty years, the unquestioned leader, always in the very front rank, and on the extreme outpost. He was devoted to the principle because he was devoted to the principle because it was a conviction with him, because he believed it would best subserve the interests of his fellow-citizens and secure the highest prosperity of his country. *

That public which he served so well owes him a debt which it can never repay. Men of all classes and conditions turned to him as their friend and he served them faithfully and well: We shall miss him from these halls. We have already missed him. We will nonor him most by emulating his many virtues."

DEATH WAS UNAVOIDABLE.

Philadelphia Medical Journal Discusses President's Wound. Philadelphia, Sept. 21.-The Philadelphia Medical Journal to-day says regarding

'Now that the track of the wound has

"Now that the track of the wound has been laid bare, an exclamation of surprise has swept over the land. Gangrene, the result of intense devitalization of tissues or possibly of the irritating action of some unrecognized germ or virus, had destroyed the patient. The unexpected had happened. The proper course had been pursued, the dreaded complications that were common had been averted, and the medical and surgical men who had labored so loyally and conscientiously in behalf of their patient had the satisfaction that no mistake had been made.

"The unusual sequel against which no precautions could have been taken had only revealed itself in its latent stage by rapidity of the pulse, a sympathy which must have been purely functional, and one common to many conditions. We, as medical men, may point with satisfaction to the surgical records of the two great national patients. President Garffeld and President McKinley, as an exemplification of the vast strides that have been made in the technique of surgery during the last two decades."

him. The prayers of friends could not restore him. God's finger touched him and he slept. The gates were opened and he entered in."

From remarks, February 28, 1884, on the death of Dudley C. Haskell of Kansas:

Tibuste to a Famous Kansas.

"Death claimed him at the threshold of a great career. At the moment when he seemed best prepared for wider usefulness and for the achievement of higher triumphs, when he appeared best fitted to serve his State and country. But he is gone. * * We bow to this decree, pausing only a little while to-day, not to question the inscrutible mysteries of Providence, or to challenge his ordering, but to pay our last tribute, give our heart offerings to one whom in life we loved and honored, and who, though removed from these scenes forever, leaves behind naught but memories most pleasing and reflections most instructive and the record of a life the study of which cannot fall to make us better citizens and wiser and more faithful representatives of the people."

From a eulogy February 16, 1881, on the life and services of General John A. Logan:

"And it may be said of him that he justly represents one of the best types of American manhood and illustrates in his life the outcome and the possibilities of the American youth under the generous influence of our free institutions. * * He lived during a period of very great activities and forces and he impressed himself upon his age and time. To me the dominant and controlling force of his life was his intense patriotism. It stamped all of his acts and utterances and was the chief inspiration of the great work he wrought. His death, so sudden and unlooked for, was a shock to his countrymen, and caused universal sorrow among all classes in every part of the Union. * Mr. Beaker, the old soldiers will miss him. The old oak around which their hearts were entwined, to which their hopes clung, has failen. The old veterans have lost their sturdy friend. The Consess of the United States has lost one of its ablest counselors * the country one of its n A GOOD LINE
